I have a 1967 Model 150 Owner's Manual that I purchased after I got a 150G. I sold my plane long ago, and saw that it was eventually resold and exported out of the country. I would like to give the manual to someone that has a 150G, but no paper manual. It took me a while to track one down, and it would be better if it was being used.

These are the last Cessna 150's with manual rather than electric flaps. 3. Slant tail 150's with Omnivision: 1967 through 1977. Generally, these airplanes were improved every year, with only one caveat: Airplanes after 1970 have the landing/taxi light mounted on the cowl instead of on the wing. Extra vibration on the cowl shortens filament life ...
